

Dr. Alix Deymier is an assistant professor of biomedical engineering at the UConn Health Center specializing in mineralized tissue structure, composition and mechanics. She has a bachelor's degree in Materials Science from the University of Arizona and a PhD in Materials Science from Northwestern University. She completed postdoctoral work with Dr. Arthur Veis and Dr. Stavros Thomopoulos at Northwestern University, Washington University in St Louis, and Columbia University in Molecular Cell Biology and Orthopaedic Surgery. She is also an avid dancer, choreographer, gardener, and activist.