

I am Shayani Parida, a graduate student in Materials Science and Engineering. I study how lithium ion batteries work at the level of atoms using computer simulations. So, I primarily code and run programs; kind of perform experiments but only "theoretically". The hope of my efforts is to improve the battery performance, make them safer to use and more environmentally friendly.